Appointment and Political Department (including Appointment Department 1905-21 and Political Department 1905-21)

The Appointment Department was created in October 1905 with appointments, archaeology, education and miscellaneous branches. The Miscellaneous Branch dealt with honours and political appointments which had previously come under the Foreign Department. The other subjects had been the responsibility of the Home Department. Education and archaeology were transferred in 1908 to the new Education Department and in April 1911 an Examinations Branch was created. This disappeared in April 1912 along with the Miscellaneous Branch whose subjects moved to the Political Department. Education returned briefly for the single month of April 1912 but thenceforward there was only the Appointments Branch.

The Political Department was also created in October 1905 and dealt with relations with Indian states and frontier areas. In April 1912 honours also came under the department and in August 1918 the Military Branch was transferred from the General Department.

In July 1921 the departments amalgamated as the Appointment and Political Department with the existing appointments, military and political branches. A separate Assam Rifles Branch was added in 1922 and an Appointment Miscellaneous Branch in 1928 which dealt with religious affairs.

Education Department

An Education Department was created in 1908 with agriculture, archaeology, education and miscellaneous branches. Agriculture had previously come under the Revenue Department and archaeology and education under the Appointment Department. The Miscellaneous Branch dealt with newspapers and periodicals which were previously handled in the Miscellaneous Branch of the General Department. Agriculture and archaeology were transferred to the new Agriculture Department in 1910. When Eastern Bengal and Assam was dissolved in April 1912 the Education Department briefly disappeared, with education going to the Appointment Department and miscellaneous to the General Department, but was revived in May 1912 with an education branch only. The Miscellaneous Branch, dealing with books, archaeology, ethnology, census and ecclesiastical matters, was transferred from the General Department in 1915. In July 1921 registration was added from the General Department and medical and sanitation (public health from 1922) from the Municipal Department. When the Local Self-Government Department was abolished in 1923 the local self-government branch came under the Education Department until September 1924 when it, together with the medical, sanitary and registration branches formed the revived Local Self-Government Department. In September 1927 the agriculture, co-operative, industries and separate revenue branches were transferred from the General and Judicial Department, separate revenue being moved again to the Medical Department in 1929. From 1928 responsibility for ecclesiastical subjects moved from Education Miscellaneous to Appointment Miscellaneous.

Finance and Commerce Department see Financial Department

Financial Department
(including Finance and Commerce Department 1884-1905)

The subjects dealt with in the Finance and Commerce Department included taxation, trade, industry and minerals. In March 1905 it was divided into separate departments of Finance and Commerce and Industry. On the creation of Eastern Bengal and Assam in October 1905, the Financial Department had branches for finance, forests, separate revenue (taxation and duties) and immigration. Immigration and separate revenue were transferred to the Municipal Department in August 1907 and February 1909 respectively and forests to the Revenue Department in April 1912. Separate revenue returned in October 1914 and forests in September 1918. In July 1921 both were again transferred, separate revenue to the General and Judicial Department and forests to the Revenue Department, but immigration returned to the Financial Department until June 1927 after which it came under the General and Judicial Department. In October 1928 the Finance Branch was divided into audit and budget.

General and Judicial Department (including General Department 1905-21 and Judicial Department 1905-121)

The General Department was created in 1905 with medical, sanitation, military and miscellaneous branches. A General Branch was created in June 1906 and at the same time registration was transferred from the Judicial Department and sanitation to the Municipal Department. At the beginning of 1910 jails was transferred from the Judicial Department and in December 1910 the Medical Branch went to the Municipal Department. In March 1911 both jails and military became part of the new Police Department but military returned in January 1912. The General and Miscellaneous Branches were both divided in April 1911. General (Education) dealt with ecclesiastical, census, gazetteers and ethnology, and General (Home) with the remainder, mainly government bungalows. The two branches of the Miscellaneous Branch handled books and publications and commerce and industry respectively.

On the reorganization of the Secretariat in April 1912 the General Department contained registration, military, general, miscellaneous and miscellaneous (education) brances. General dealt with explosives, criminal lunatics came under miscellaneous and miscellaneous (education) included books, archaeology, ecclesiastical, ethnology and census. Jails was added from the Municipal Department in May 1914 and immigration from the Judicial Department in the following month. In 1915 explosives became a separate branch in the Judicial Department and the Miscellaneous Branch was renamed General. At the same time the Miscellaneous (Education) Branch was transferred to the Education Department, and in August 1918 the Political Department assumed control of the Military Branch.

The Judicial Department, also created in 1905, was originally divided into jails, judicial, legislative, police and registration branches. As noted above, registration and jails were transferred to the General Department in 1906 and 1910 and the Legislative and Police Branches became separate departments in January 1910 and March 1911. Police reverted to the Judicial Department in April 1912 and immigration was transferred from the Municipal Department at the same time, moving to the General Department in June 1914. In 1915 explosives and legislative branches were added from the General and Legislative Departments. A separate Legislative Department was re-established in February 1921.

In July 1921 the two departments amalgamated to form the General and Judicial Department with general (dealings with publications), jails, judicial, police, explosives and separate revenue (formerly in the Financial Department) branches. Subjects transferred were registration and immigration to the Education and Finance Departments respectively. On the dismantling of the Local Self-Government Department in 1923, agriculture, co-operative and industries branches were added. All of these together with separate revenue moved to the Education Department in July 1927, when immigration returned to to the General and Judicial Department, and electricity was transferred from the Public Works Department in 1931.

Home Department

Subjects handled included appointments, archaeology, books, ecclesiastical, education, jails, judicial, legislation, local self-government, medical, police, public health and registration. From August 1879 to June 1881, when the Home and the Revenue and Agriculture Departments amalgamated, it also dealt with agriculture, emigration and immigration, revenue and surveys, and with forests from August 1879 to August 1886. On the creation of Eastern Bengal and Assam its functions were divided between the new Appointment, General, Judicial and Municipal Departments.

Local Self-Government Department
(including Municipal Department 1905-21)

A Municipal Department was created for Eastern Bengal and Assam in October 1905, matters relating to local boards having previously been dealt with in the Home, Department. The Municipal Department originally had municipal, local boards, public works and miscellaneous branches, the last named embracing trade and industry. To these were added sanitation in June 1906 (from the General Department), immigration in August 1907 and separate revenue in February 1909 (from the Financial Department) and medical in December 1910 (from the General Department). On the reconstitution of Assam in April 1912, the municipal and local boards branches were merged into a local self-government branch. Immigration was transferred to the Judicial Department and the Jails Branch became part of the Municipal Department until Aprl 1914 when it reverted to the General Department. In September 1914 separate revenue was transferred to the Financial Department and from September 1917 to January 1920 a Priority Branch existed to deal with munitions matters.

In July 1921 the department became the Local Self-Government Department with local self-government, miscellaneous, agriculture, co-operative and industries branches, the last three being transferred from the Revenue Department, while the Medical and Sanitation branches became part of the Education Department. The department was dissolved in 1923 when local self-government became a branch of the General and Judicial Department, but it was revived in September 1924 with local self-government, registration, medical and public health branches which had formerly come under the Education Department. In 1929 the department was divided, with the Medical and Public Health Branches becoming a separate Medical Department.

Revenue Department
(including Revenue and Agriculture Department 1884-1905)

The Revenue and Agriculture Department of Assam dealt with revenue, agriculture, immigration, labour, surveys and (from September 1886) forests. In October 1905 its functions were divided between the Revenue and Financial

Revenue Department (contd)

Departments. The Revenue Department was divided into revenue and miscellaneous branches, the latter dealing mainly with fisheries and minerals except oil which until 1912 was handled in the General Department. In 1915 the former Agriculture Department became a branch of the Revenue Department and co-operative and industries branches were created at the beginning of 1921. Co-operation had hitherto been treated in the Revenue Branch and industries in the Miscellaneous Branch of the Municipal Department. The agriculture, co-operative and industries branches were transferred to the Local Self-Government Department in July 1921 and the Forests Branch moved to Revenue. Forests had been handled in the Revenue Branch from April 1912 until a separate branch was created in the Financial Department in September 1918.
